Rootie Kazootie - a picture essay

Our vision of the way the world can be articulated within and over against existing social structures, and everywhere we turn in seeking to realize these visions we come up against institutions that stand between us and our ability to live spiritually fulfilling lives Ackelsberg Unless the quest for integration of our relationships to the Self, God, earth, and others emerges out of and leads to the creation of forms of community that nurture our whole being, this quest remains marginal to our daily lives, and thus ineffective and irrelevant. No one took me up on it.
